

2018

Thérèse shares a small two-room house with her three sisters. She is in her second year studying public law and so far is doing well. She gets to school on a bicycle we bought her.

Thérèse on her way home from university, January 2018.

2017

Thérèse is repeating her first year of law school. We sent her to a public school, which fell hopelessly behind. So we financed her study this year at a private university. She lives in a rented home with three sisters; there is no electricity. We're waiting to see if she makes it. (Recommended by Marie Battas/Sister Vitaline)

2016

Thérèse Millogo, like Ursula, thought she was qualified for a state scholarship, so she sat for five months waiting for the government announcement, which was late. In the end, the government raised the bar to qualify and Thérèse didn't get the fellowship. So we stepped in. She's enrolled as a first-year law major. But to get to university she needed a bicycle. So we bought her one.

Thérèse on her new bicycle.